Sniff who moved my cheese characters

Who moved my cheese? It is a simple example of change that reveals deep truths. It's an entertaining and enlightening story of four characters living in a maze and looking for cheese to feed them and make them happy. Cheese is a metaphor for what you want to be in life - whether it's a good job, a love affair, money, possession, health, or spiritual peace of mind. The maze is where you look for what you want — the organization you work in, the family or the community you live in. In the story, the characters are confronted with an unexpected change. Eventually, one of them deals with it successfully, and writes what he learned from his experience on the walls of the maze. When you come to see handwriting on the wall, you can discover for yourself how to deal with change, so that you can enjoy less stress and more success (however you specify it) in your work and in your life. — Spencer Johnson, January 6, 2009 who conveyed my cheese story characters overview – who's moving my cheese? It tells the story of four individuals and how each of them deals with change. You have two mice, Sniff and Scurry, and then you have two 'little people' Heme and Howe. Setup – the concept of the story is that we have four characters finding a large supply of cheese in the maze in which they live. They get very used to the cheese being in the same place every day. Cheese Station C. Surprise! - One day when they come to the C cheese station, it is completely empty. Now Sniff and Scurry have paid attention to the cheese case and were ready for this. They immediately set back to the maze to look for new cheese, and adapt quickly. Uncomfortable. – However, Heme and Howe were very upset that the cheese wasn't where it was supposed to be. They had become comfortable and felt that they deserved that the cheese would always be at the C cheese station. – Time passed and I realized that they will also need to go back to the maze to look for new cheese. Heme didn't like this and refused to budge from the C. – Howe decided to start on his own to look for new cheese. Left several messages on the walls along the way. Hoping to guide his friend Heme. What would you do if you weren't scared? The smell of cheese often so you know when it is getting old. On an adventure! – Further that Howe explore, more realize about the change, and find his new cheese. When you go beyond your fear, you feel free! When you change what you believe in, you change what you do! New cheese! – After exploring the maze, Howe finally found new cheese at the N. Cheese Station and His friends Sniff and Scurry were already there enjoying the new cheese. Howe realized that change was happening. As long as he was alert to writing on the wall he would be better prepared for change. Change is happening. They keep moving the cheese! Can you read the handwriting on the wall? Expect change. Cheese so often you know when it's getting old! Enjoy change, taste the adventure, and enjoy the taste of new cheese! Adapt to change quickly! The sooner you leave the old cheese, the sooner you enjoy the new cheese! Be prepared to change quickly and enjoy it again... They keep moving the cheese! The characters and their roles in dealing with the change smell – Sham is the creator of the story. The person who smells the situation and says the changes early. He sniffs and looks forward, but can't have anything. Expects changes. Scurry-Scurry is a product. Scurry went into action as soon as the change began. scrambling forward and bumping into the change. Heme-Him h is the stabilizing factor. Heme would like to stay in a familiar area. A person who denies change because he fears it will lead to something worse to discuss, deliberately, or think instead of taking action or making a single decision. Howe – he also wanted to stay in a familiar area, but eventually realized that he would have to look for new cheese and change. Who learns to adapt at the right time when he sees change can lead to something better! If you're a heme and a long enough howl, someone else will do it first. Which are you when it comes to dealing with change? Sniff = Innovative Scurry = Product Heme = Is The Stability Of Howe = Unified Life Lessons from My Cheese Transfer Change Happening Everywhere. We do better when we can adapt to them quickly. Are you afraid of change? Do you think others are afraid of change? Sometimes we are not aware that we are afraid to laugh and don't just manage your daily problems as they come. Make sure to look ahead, paying attention to where you are going. This is management when you must be leading. Avoid taking yourself seriously. Learn to laugh at yourself, change what you are doing, and do better. Move with the cheese! This article is for managers who want to better understand personal patterns and how to read them quickly and understand them in themselves and others. I read from the transfer of my baby cheese to my 9-year-old son recently. It's a fun little book, based on a bestseller, about four characters living in a maze and looking for cheese to feed and happy. You probably know how the story goes already (it was a bestseller) but if it wasn't, or you forgot, here's a quick summary: two characters are rats named Sham and Scurry and two little people - rat-sized objects who look and behave a lot like people. Their names are Heme and Howe Cheese is a metaphor for what you want to be in life - whether it's a good job, a love affair, money, property, health, or peace of mind. You work in, family or the community you live in. In the story, the characters are confronted with an unexpected change. Eventually, one of the little people deals with it successfully, and writes what he learned from his experience on the walls of the maze. When you come to see handwriting on the wall you can discover for yourself how to deal with change, so that you enjoy less stress and more success (however you select) in your work and life. There's a lot of truth in the book and I thought it would be fun to connect the four characters to the four PSIU forces of organizational physics. That way, the next time you manage heme, howl, sniff, or zim, you'll have a better sense of how to deal with it. As a conversation, here is a matrix that shows the attributes of the four global PSIU forces. If this concept is new to you, you can quickly get a sense of it using the fastest personality test in the world (it takes less than 15 seconds to get a good sense of someone's style). The four forces of organizational physics: PSIU. Here are the four who have transferred my cheese characters set to each force: characters from my cheese transfer set to the four PSIU forces of organizational physics. In short: smell is an innovative method. It has the ability to feel and respond to changes in the environment much more quickly than other patterns. He gets excited to create new things, loves you getting excited with him. Scurry is a product method. He has the ability to run, run, run and do work from early to late he gets frustrated when there are obstacles in his way and seeks to run around them or punch through them. Heme is a stabilizing pattern. He has the ability to make things organized and manageable in the story, he is the one who lags behind because change can be seen as a really big threat to someone who excels in control and stability. Howe is a uniform pattern. He has the ability to empathize and communicate well with others. In the story, it is an howl that follows Sham and Scurry but while all is worried about where heheim is and how he is doing. Eventually, Howe leaves writing on the wall to others like Heme to follow. The main thing I want you to take away is that the four forces of PSIU of organizational physics are universal. This means they appear in both good children's books and board room. When you learn to discover and understand them, you greatly increase your own abilities as a troll and manager. The second thing I want you to take away is that, just as in the story that transports my cheese, the right approach to managing change is to be on the right side of the matrix above. The producer and innovator are both lean forward styles who excel at sniffing change and scrambling to make it work to their advantage. You should also tend to change rather than lean away from it. The third thing I want you to take is not in the story, it's the left side of the matrix. stability and Unifier, also bring incredible value to the table. They help to make things organized, effective and take care of others while helping to keep everyone working well as a team. An integrated team is required to manage and respond to change. One side without the other is doomed to failure. In other words, it is all the parties -- all the forces -- that are working together towards a common goal that makes finding cheese truly enjoyable and sustainable over time. Time.
